To my beloved mother, Gudrun Wolff,
and to my godparents, Hilde Müller and Heimfrid Wolff.

I owe them more than could be said in a few written words.

Just as many a dissertation, this present work is not the work of one single individual. I have benefitted from the efforts of my coauthors. Other scholars have provided valuable input at conferences and seminars. Colleagues have helped with their support in manyfold ways. In fact, there are so many people without whom the present dissertation would not be the work it is that I am positive I will forget to thank some of them. If you are among this unlucky bunch, be assured it was not done on purpose. As a final remark, note that in this general section I am restricting myself to those involved in the formation of the present thesis as a whole. People who contributed to individual papers comprised in this collection will be mentioned directly in the corresponding paper.

First of all, I would like to thank my coauthor and supervisor Bettina Rockenbach for providing research conditions that not many people have the privilege of enjoying and for the energy she put into the improvement of our papers especially in the final phase of this dissertation. I further express my sincere gratitude to Andreas Nicklisch for the fun it has been to work with him, as well as for keeping faith with me, even though our faith in the joint project was short of vanishing once and again. To complete the list of coauthors who contributed to the papers comprised in this dissertation, I would like to thank Özgür Gürerk for inducing me to engage extensively in the study of the inequality-aversion model of Fehr and Schmidt (1999). The deepening of knowledge I experienced in the course of these studies will certainly prove very helpful in my further research. Last but not least, I am very grateful to academic big-shot Joe Sutliff who has published repeatedly in top journals such as Science, for generously agreeing to 'coauthor' on the cover cartoon of this book,* for the symbolic price of a single copy of my thesis.

Coming to those people whose name is not to be found on top of any of the papers, let me express my gratitude to Thomas Dimpfl and Stefan Grosse for their support in anything that concerns the working of my computer and of the work-related software as well as in econometric questions, and for keeping me grounded. Also, I am thankful to Arne Weiß for giving me the feeling that I am an incredibly knowledgeable and experienced 'old hand', for making me visit China and for his readiness to help out in case I needed it. I thank Fabian Kleine for his advice on econometric issues, for making me visit Poland, and for keeping up the good relations even in personally challenging situations. Last but not least, I would like to thank Mareike Hoffmann for a marvellous Thai dinner, a horse-back ride, a very professional coaching session, and the thousand little things she would always help out on. Most importantly, I would like to thank all of them for their friendship.

The following two people have not been involved directly in any of the projects. Nevertheless, they have contributed indirectly by being my teachers since I first met them. I am deeply indebted to Philipp Reiss and especially Abdolkarim Sadrieh for being not only very nice coauthors on projects that have not found their way into this dissertation, but also outstanding mentors in what concerns career-related decisions – and often, beyond. And, what makes me even more grateful, for always finding time for me when I thought I needed it.

Finally, I thank Uta Knörnschild for being the wonderful woman she is, for always cheering me up, and for being an invaluable support in the stressful past months. If I am not a bag of nerves today, it is because of her support.
