Acknowledgments

This research would not have been possible without the substantial support of many people and institutions. During several years of theoretical and empirical work at the Institute of Rural Development (IRD) and the STORMA (Stability of the Rainforest Margin) project in Central Sulawesi province, Indonesia, I had the opportunity to engage in research on micro finance.

First of all, I would like to thank God for his blessing from the first until the last step of the writing process.

I am indebted to my first supervisor, Prof. Dr. Manfred Zeller, of the Institute of Rural Development (IRD) at the Georg-August-University in Göttingen, whom I would like to thank not only for his valuable advice, comments and constructive criticism throughout the various steps from the preparation until the final version but also for sharing his valuable insights related to micro finance in economic development. I would like to thank my second supervisor, Prof. Dr. Karin Holm-Müller, of the Institute of Agricultural Policy, Market Research and Economics Sociology at Bonn University, for her helpful suggestions, evaluations and comments on this work. My sincere thanks go further to Prof. Dr. Heide Inhetveen as the Director of the Institute of Rural Development at the Georg-August University, Göttingen, during the time of my study. I would like to express my special thanks to Kenneth Muller for help with proofreading the dissertation. I am grateful to all of the members and staff at the IRD, the librarians at the institute, and the members of the STORMA project. I am particularly grateful to my best friend Stefan Schwarze for his valuable discussion, feedback and psychological support throughout the course of this research.

I owe my deepest thanks and appreciation to the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD) that provided me with scholarships. Special thanks are due to Mrs. Barbara Schwarz-Bergmann and all of the administrative staff at the DAAD desk 422 in Bonn for their kind assistance and support.

Special thanks go to my colleagues within the scope of the A3 and A4 STROMA sub-projects with whom it was very pleasant to work with, namely PD.Dr Regina Birner, Dr. Teunis van Rheenen, Miet Maertens, Marhawati Mappatobe and Adhitya Wardhono.

Without the kind cooperation of those involved in the field research in Central Sulawesi Province, this study would not have been possible. I am grateful to all the field research assistants; Pitono, Kaswanto, Januard, Maskur Fatta, Sarton Mengkido, Sumarno Syamsuri, Umar Turungku, Ketut, Jonathan, Sukadarman, Benyamin and Yasin deserve special thanks for the effort they made to collect reliable data, their commitment, and their good-humored way of working together as a team.

I would further like to express my deep gratitude to our respondents who were willing to sacrifice their time for the lengthy interviews. Their cooperation and patience was the most crucial prerequisite for the successful implementation of this research.

Special thanks to all of the Indonesian students and families in Göttingen who supplied a very nice atmosphere during my stay in this “city of education.”

Finally I would like to thank to my beloved wife Triana Anggraenie, my son Aufa Fikri Nurmaulana and my daughter Sabrina Nurraihana for their great encouragement, support, patience and understanding during my work. I would also like to thank my large family in Indonesia for their patience and support particularly my mother Hj Kristi Any Poernomo, my brothers and sisters and my parents-in-law H. Rivai Syam and Hj Noneng.

This work is dedicated to my late father, H.Poernomo who taught and gave me the important meaning of life.
